SENATOR REED ASSAILS EARL FOR HIS "POLITICS"

Reed, of Dauphin, in Bitter Attack On The Floor

REVEALS "DUMPING"
Says There Is A Conspiracy
Afoot to Hamstring
Industry

HARRISBURG, Apr. 24.—In a smashing and wholly unexpected attack on Democratic policy, State and national, Senator George L. Reed, Dauphin county Republican, yesterday charged that relief administration has been turned into a political racket, and that a conspiracy is afoot to hamstring Pennsylvania industry in the name of social reform.

Reed's indictment of the Earle administration was accepted as a presentation of the viewpoint of the Republican-dominated Senate in the fiscal controversy which has held the attention of Capitol Hill since the early days of the present legislative session.

It came late in the afternoon and followed closely on a meeting of the Finance Committee, which is drafting a statement again setting forth that the Senate is willing to provide $111,500,000 in new taxes instead of the $23,000,000 demanded by Governor Earle.

From Federal and State sources Senator Reed presented an array of figures tending to show that industry in Pennsylvania is on the upgrade and that a continuance of the improvement may reasonably be expected if manufacturing concerns are not stifled by new taxes and regulations which inevitably increase the cost of production.

Cites Rising Costs

"It is a justifiable assumption that the Governor calculated the enlarged figure would help soften the shock to the public when the fact was revealed that during the first three months of his administration the cost of relief per person was 70 per cent above the average for the whole of 1934 and 120 per cent above the average for the corresponding months of last year.

"There has been no real mystery, therefore, as to the reason for the insistence demand that the Legislature appropriate relief funds for a second year on the basis of $5,000,000 a month as the State's share."

Drawing his inspiration from statements attributed to Jefferson and Lincoln, Senator Reed declared "Pennsylvania must have a wise and frugal government," adding that "the Republican Senate says that waste and extravagance shall not prevail."

Using figures taken from the Federal census report and reports of the Federal Reserve Bank, Senator Reed stated that of the 336 types of manufacturing found in the country, 311 are represented in Pennsylvania. He declared the average wage paid by these industries in March of this year was four per cent higher than that of March, 1934, and that on the whole wages compare favorably with those paid in 1929, the last boom year.

From the tenor of the Reed speech it seemed to be accepted that the Senate, or at least the Republican majority, has definitely rejected Governor Earle's request that the capital stock exemption now extended to manufacturing corporations, be repealed.

In the main the oratorical offering of the Dauphin solon was concerned with the plight of the manufacturers and in this connection he held up Massachusetts as a horrible example.

In that State, he related, industry was driven to new locations because of excessive taxation and a penchant for legislation of the social security classification.

Reed said he feared that the same fate will befall Pennsylvania industry if the Earle program should be written into the statute books of the Commonwealth.

And in the end, he related, the wage earners would be among the chief sufferers.

Blanket Charges

The Senator charged: 1.—That the Earle administration has presented not a single suggestion looking toward industrial recovery.

2.—That the administration's program for added taxation "is inflated beyond reason."

3.—That the cost of relief in the State is 70 per cent above the 1934 average and that it is 120 per cent above the same months of last year.

4.—That the administration completely disregards the present burdens and handicaps on productive enterprise.

5.—That amendments to the workers' compensation law supported by the administration "would add not less than $50,000,000 a year to the costs of industrial operation in Pennsylvania and unquestionably would cause a wholesale exodus of productive enterprise from this State."

And finally, Senator Reed said, the administration has sponsored numerous other bills, "all designed to further and unnecessarily increase production costs and destroy jobs in Pennsylvania."

Striking out at the Federal administration, Senator Reed accused it of letting down the bars to foreign goods with the result that the country is flooded with articles manufactured in Japan and other nations with lower wages and a lower standard of living.

Citing specifically the case of Japan, the Dauphin Senator presented a table showing that from 1929 to 1934 its imports to this country increased eight fold in cotton gloves up to more than 200,000 in knives.

All this, he related, has had a trip hammer effect on Pennsylvania industry, driving it down and down and seriously interfering with the process of normal recovery.

Hits "Monkey Wrenches"

"One might reasonably suppose," he declared, "and even confidently expect, under circumstances such as these with millions seeking jobs and with industry making superhuman efforts not only to provide these jobs, but to do so at real wages equal to a pre-depression high, that the National administration at Washington and our State administration at Harrisburg would stop throwing monkey wrenches into the economic machine and cooperate without limit to help effectuate that recovery toward which manufacturing industry has made such a notable contribution."

Instead of co-operating, Senator Reed charged, the Federal and the State administrations have been giving "amazing exhibitions of political boor-dogging."

He accused Secretary of State Hull—described as "about the only free trader left in the United States"—of negotiating treaties making it easier for foreign countries to dump their products into America to the consequent detriment of the domestic workers.

Neither the Federal nor the State administration, Senator Reed asserted, is concerning itself with the problem of getting people off the relief rolls.

Rolls Still Clogged

"It has been stated by responsible persons, and it has not been denied," he said, "that the Government's open objective is to get the maximum number possible on relief. The fact is that in spite of the increased employment and payrolls of industry, in spite of the fact that mutual savings deposits in this country increased by $163,000,000 during 1934, with 423,000 new accounts in such institutions, with an increase of $793,000,000 in the volume of new businesses and led by the larger life insurance companies, the number of families on relief in February of this year was nearly 2,000,000 more than in February, 1934."

While touching on the relief question, Senator Reed accused the Governor of overstating the magnitude of the problem in Pennsylvania. "In every one of the many speeches he has made on the subject," said Senator Reed, "Governor Earle has referred to the 2,000,000 persons on relief in this State. The actual average for the first three months of his administration was 1,690,000. Why the exaggeration by 310,000, or nearly 20 per cent."

"The suspicion is becoming widespread," Senator Reed declared, "that there has been and is a definite and well considered program for deliberately enlarging the relief rolls for Democratic political purposes even by the desperate expedient of hamstringing industry and crucifying labor by destroying more jobs."

Thumbs Down

From the tenor of the Reed speech it seemed to be accepted that the Senate, or at least the Republican majority, has definitely rejected Governor Earle's request that the capital stock exemption now extended to manufacturing corporations, be repealed.

Drawing his inspiration from statements attributed to Jefferson and Lincoln, Senator Reed declared "Pennsylvania must have a wise and frugal government," adding that "the Republican Senate says that waste and extravagance shall not prevail."

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER LUNCHEON IS ENJOYED

For Members of Yardley W. C. T. U.; Program Given By Y. P. B.

SEVERAL ARE PRESENT

YARDLEY, Apr. 24.—Mrs. William C. Beener was hostess to members of the Yardley W. C. T. U. at their annual Mothers' and Daughters' luncheon, Monday, at one o'clock, at her home on West Afton avenue.

Following the luncheon the program was given by the Yardley Y. P. B., and was opened by the reading of the Bible by Miss Margaret Daugherty, followed by the singing of the state song by members. Miss Betty Robinson favored with a piano solo, "The Rosary." A playlet, "Thinks and Drinks," was given by Misses Eleanor Caffey, Anna Wright, Helen Wright, and Marguerite Beener.

Miss Dorothy DeLaney favored with a vocal solo, "Isle of Capri," being accompanied at the piano by Miss Ida Blaker. Miss Carolyn Seplow rendered a piano solo.

A playlet, "Weighed in the Balance," was presented by Misses Mary Robbins, Elizabeth Robinson, Gladys A. Harper, Dorothy DeLaney. A song, "Carry On," was sung by members of the Y. P. B., with Marguerite Beener at the piano. Miss Gladys A. Harper gave a medical temperance demonstration, followed by a piano solo, "The Palms," by Miss Betty Robinson. An Easter story, "Easter Lillies," was presented by Miss Gladys A. Harper.

"But upon the one subject that is uppermost in the mind of every thinking person, not one word, not even a single gesture.

"On the contrary, the Governor prepared what was obviously a 'political' budget, which, with its attendant proposal for $203,000,000 of new and additional taxes was based wholly upon the theory of a diminishing business and industrial activity within Pennsylvania during the next two years, with resultant shrinkage of revenues from existing sources, and a steady expansion of the already scandalously swollen relief rolls.

Tirade of Abuse

"That is a plain statement of fact concerning the Administration's budget and tax program which it would be well for everyone to clearly understand. It is a statement which cannot be denied, yet it is quite certain that no one would get any such impression from what the Governor or any of his supporters have had to say in the tirades of abuse and willful misrepresentation which he and they have poured out through the newspapers and the radio, against those who have refused to accept or approve such an unwarranted and indefensible program."

DECIDE ON GIRLS' EVENTS DURING WEEK FOR YOUTH

Schedule Practically the Same As For Last Year

ELIMINATIONS PLANNED

Twelve Attend Meeting Last Evening; Not All Districts Represented

Representatives from some of the districts were present at the meeting in the Travel Club home last evening, when a discussion of events for girls during Youth Week was held. Mrs. Theodore B. Megargee presided. Twelve women and girls attended.

The events decided upon are: Poetry, skating, poster, music, dancing and marble contests. The music contests will include three groups, vocalists, pianists and those playing other instruments. The music contests as well as the dancing will be held in conjunction with the motion picture show for girls on Thursday at 2:30 o'clock at the Grand Theatre. The women members of the faculty of Bristol high school will be present at the "movie" show to care for the girls. Mrs. Chauncey E. Stoneback, Sr., has agreed to take charge of the dancing events.

A treasure hunt will take place at four o'clock Monday afternoon, and a few hundred girls are expected to participate. The roller-skating contests will be held on the same day on which the boys have theirs.

Suggestions were made last evening of young women to serve as ward leaders, and to assume responsibility for the contests, and those in attendance last night were asked to interview those named.

Music contests will depend on the number of entries, those in charge later deciding if elimination contests are to be held. Elimination contests for the dancers will occur at 2:30 p.m., Saturday, at the Travel Club home, with Mrs. Stoneback in charge. After the eliminations one girl will remain from each district for Class A and Class B, thus having a representative in each class from each district to compete in the finals next week. Girls from Edgely, Croydon and Bristol's wards are invited to enter.

The sixth grade of the Friends' School will feature a puppet show as their part of the entertainment. The show is called "The Licorice Kids," and will be recited and worked by Leslie Paul, Valtarine DeChyre and Jeanne Miller. This will be followed by the following features: piano solo, Dorothy Hastings; tap dance, Eleanor Allen. The most spectacular of all will be "A School Boy's Dream," in which the characters are: Grandfather, Robert Mitchell; school boy, Joseph Rothenback; education, Dora Brooks; literature, Leona Cloud; geography, Norma Klockner; China, Mary Pickering; Japan, Inez Boal; The Three R's, Dorothy Hastings; Dorothy Watson, Ethel Jacobs; music, Frances Fawcett; art, Barbara Green; nature study, Josephine Streland; physical education, Marlen Ludwig. Schooner With Bristolian Aboard Reaches Bermudas

A news dispatch from Hamilton, the capital of the Bermudas, states that "The Pilgrim," the schooner on which a Bristol boy is accompanying a party from the United States in search of sunken and buried treasure, has safely reached that port after a seven-day passage from New York. The Bristolian in the party is Michael Ciancioli, Grand avenue.

The small vessel was driven considerably off her course on the 630-mile run to the semi-tropical islands. Although the boat had difficulty in reaching the port of Hamilton, arrangements were being made to leave soon for San Juan, Puerto Rico, tomorrow.

Lieutenant Harry C. Adams, of Bethlehem, U. S. N., retired, and the eight friends who accompanied him, are now about ready to continue their journey. The jaunt will take the party to the Canary and Madeira Islands and to various points on the Caribbean Sea.

HUMAN EFFICIENCY

When scientific research happens to bear out a belief or prejudice long enjoying popular currency, there generally is good feeling all around. The widespread satisfaction greeting the announcement by science that certain traditional food combinations, like bread and milk, meat and potatoes, or pigs' knuckles and sauerkraut, are naturally, chemically and dietetically complementary still lingers in our memory.

Similar satisfaction will be gleamed from the discovery, announced at a recent meeting of experimental biologists, that human efficiency is at its lowest ebb during the working day. Tests have disclosed efficiency is at its peak soon after waking, rapidly declines during the day and then as rapidly builds up again in the evening, reaching another peak about bed-time.

This bears out not merely one but several ideas cherished by a human race, which long has suffered silently over the gradual fading away of its breakfast-time brightness. Also, reluctance to go to bed at a seasonable hour, a failing common to all ages, now is revealed as no mere whim but a natural objection to resigning the brain to health-giving slumber just at the moment of highest effectiveness.

But of even greater comfort, perhaps, is the discovery that the working day is the worst time to work. The many whose efficiency undergoes a notable slump as soon as the time-clock is punched heretofore guiltily have laid their weakness to mere old-fashioned bone laziness. Now we are at liberty to lay this disability at the door of nature. Science IS wonderful.

BEAUTIFUL BUT DUMB

At the dawning of the jazz age the expression "beautiful but dumb" was generally accepted as an irrefutable truth. The superstition became so deeply rooted that young men bent on matrimony lost hope of getting both beauty and brains in the same package of femininity.

Today the expression stands challenged by a scientist, but even before this scientific attack it had lost face, although the multitudes do not go as far as the misogynist who argues that nature has discriminated in favor of neither the beautiful nor the ugly.

This challenger of the jazz faith and defender of the sex contends the intellectuals enjoy more than their share of physical attractiveness. This may or may not be true, but there is even less reason for the beautiful-but-dumb theory.

Exploitation of good looks with- out regard to other qualities, of which the movies, stage, beauty contests and journalism all are guilty, is responsible for the beautiful-but-dumb myth.

It should not be forgotten that there is a deeper form of beauty that is made up of character and spirit as well as of physical features.

"THE COLD FINGER CURSE"
by EDWIN DIAL TORGERSON

CHAPTER XIX

Inspector McEniry released Johnny Hankins with a warning to quit shooting craps and roaming around so late at night.

The examination of the others—for McEniry proposed to go over again all the ground that Darden had covered—was interrupted by the arrival of Charles Porter Elderbank of Montreal, in company with Captain-Detective Pierre Montigny of the Montreal detective bureau. The millionaire's special train had made the run from Montreal in record time.

Elderbank, a staunch old lion who looked like von Hindenburg and had a tired, soft voice, had hurried to police headquarters from the train. He seemed impervious to excitement, but there was deep grief in the lines of his face and his weary eyes. He had sat up talking with Captain Montigny virtually all night as their train rushed south.

Pierre Montigny was a tall, dark man in his fifties, dressed in sober clothing. His hair, eyes and pointed mustaches were perfectly black, his complexion a sallow tan. When he smiled it became known chiefly by the fact that his drooping mustaches wiggled faintly, and a certain roguish highlight appeared in his eyes. He was quiet, suave, self-contained. He had an ambassadorial poise. There was a certain sleek grace to his movements. His hands were thin, his fingers long, slim and deft. He looked like Hermann the Great, stage magician of a bygone day.

Inspector McEniry greeted the detective cordially. He had heard much of Montigny had conversed with him many times by telephone, but this was their first meeting.

"It looks like a tough case to begin with, Captain," said McEniry. "Glad you're here. We're going to need all the help we can get."

"I note in the numerous journals," observed Montigny solemnly, "that you have many suspects."

"Suspects?" growled McEniry. "They're walking on each other's toes. There's one it looks pretty bad for, though. We'll have him in a minute."

"Where is Merriam?" inquired Elderbank, expressionlessly. "I was told he was here with you."

"He is," grunted the Inspector. "I'll call him in. But first let me ask you, Mr. Elderbank—what do you know about him? He says he hired him through a private detective agency. Which one?"

"Yes, that is true," said the old man, with a trace of bitterness. "He was employed to protect my wife, and this is what he brought her to!"

"Which agency?" repeated McEniry.

"The Bandler Agency. I had been told they were thoroughly trustworthy."

"Hm. Well, I guess they are. You saw their Montreal man, and arranged to get this Merriam placed as a sort of secretary and companion to your wife, without her knowing it?"

Elderbank nodded gravely. "You must understand, Inspector, that the—er—vagaries of Mrs. Elderbank's temperament demand some protection of this sort. I wanted her to be constantly under the eye of some one whom I could trust. But she felt quite self-confident, and would have resented it if she had known that anyone had been employed to—er—watch her. Understand, Inspector," he added hastily, "that that was not my motive. My motive was to guard, not watch her. She was excessively fond of this so-called 'gay' life, and she wore so many jewels when going about that I feared for her safety," Elderbank said.

bank knew that number, Merriam of course among them. That narrows it down somewhat—though of course we've got to admit a lot of people were prowling around sightseeing in the house last night, and could have got the number that way, but it was a prearranged stut—when the excitement and noise of this Zulu dance business was at its height they put in the call, pretending it was the telegraph office."

"And the call, beyond doubt, was from the rooms of this man Thurber, next door?" interrogated the old man sternly.

"It was. And Thurber admits being next door at the time—we have additional proof that he put in a call over another telephone just prior to this call—the public phone in the hall."

"The fiends!" muttered Elderbank hoarsely.

"I don't think they intended to commit murder, but that doesn't help us now—nor will it help them when we get them."

"And this blackguard Merriam—the cord at his window?"

"I have no doubt that the cord extended to your wife's bedroom window; that the man or men who attacked her and stole the jewelry put it in a bag which they tied to the end of that line, so that a man in Merriam's window could pull it in."

Pretty neat method of getting the loot out of the way. A man or men present at that party last night committed the crime—and did not have to leave the house afterward."

Pierre Montigny ventured a soft interjection: "What troubles me greatly, Inspector, is why she should leave this, damaging cord dangling as a clue."

McEniry snorted. "Scared away."

"She wore so many jewels when going about that I feared for her safety," Elderbank said.

I suppose. A lot of 'em lose their nerve and get panicky at the last moment. They didn't have time to pull in all that cord—they wanted to make a getaway."

"And Garvice, the missing tenant at Merriam's house—he was the outside confederate, shall we suppose?"

McEniry shrugged. "It looks that way, doesn't it?" He was not seen by anyone at that house yesterday, or the day before, or the week before.

Of course it's quite possible to come and go unobserved in a small, quiet house of that kind. Anyhow, we haven't been able to locate him."

"And Mr. Thurber's finger-prints were found on the telephone at Mrs. Elderbank's bedside?"

She wore so many jewels when going about that I feared for her safety," Elderbank said.

"Yes, you may see the telephone itself downstairs, Captain. No question about it. His finger-prints are on the ladder leading to the roof of the house he lives in, too."

"And the black smudge on the bedclothes—that you think, would tend to incriminate this dancer, Duane?"

"Well, it looks that way, doesn't it?" countered McEniry a bit petulantly.

He had the opportunity, too.

He was supposed to be in his dressing room on the library floor at the time this crime was committed, but he has no witnesses to prove he was there for a certain twenty minutes. He might have slipped upstairs to the top floor; he might have been there fifteen minutes before the lights went out to give him a chance to hide in the library fireplace. Of course, the smudge on the bedclothes is not enough to convict him, though."

"No, I am afraid not," said Montigny musingly. "Nor is the cord sufficient to convict Merriam—nor the telephone call enough to convict Thurber."

"But his finger-prints, Captain—

we've got him dead to rights there.

We can prove he climbed to the roof from his place, we can prove he was in the lady's bedroom—by his own admission he had never been in the house before last night. We prove, on top of that, that the fake call came from his apartment. A little more to strengthen it, and we've got a case.

The District Attorney's office thinks so. I hate it, though.

The police are going to ride the devil out of us for picking on a newspaper man."

All the young people are encouraged to go to some church on Sunday, April 28th. There will be special music by young people.

Wednesday will close the Youth Week for Langhorne. It is to be an evening where the youth of the family "run things" for one night. It is suggested that the evening meal be prepared by the son or daughter or if this is not practical then urge the mothers to prepare the meals especially for the boys or girls and include on the menu special dishes to the youth's liking.

After dinner the family is urged to enjoy an old fashioned family circle and let the children of the family plan the entertainment for that one night. There will be special broadcasts over the national net works emphasizing the beauties of wholesome family life and the mutual understanding between parents and children.

On Wednesday morning, the day the week ends, the seniors will go to Washington, D. C., for a tour of the city. They will return May 4th.
